Music professor released from jail

Police investigate extortion attempts

By SCOTT H. WAITE

and Associated Press

A BYU music professor and his nephew have been released from jail while law enforcement personnel continue their investigation into the fire-bombing and extortion attempts involving a penny-stock promoter.

Percy G. Kalt, 58, 4089 Devonshire Circle, Provo, is a professor of music at BYU. He said he expected charges to be forthcoming. He said, "In the attempt to regain my money, I exceeded the bounds of the law, and the whole affair became an obsession which I now regret."

Kalt, a violinist, has taught at BYU since 1966 and has a doctorate from the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor.

Paul Richards, BYU spokesman, said Kalt's classes are being taught by other faculty members.

"He is still on the faculty and will remain so until the legal process is completed," said Richards. "We believe that a man is innocent until proven guilty ... depending on the outcome of legal proceedings, BYU will determine what to do."

Richards said that investigators from Salt Lake City came to BYU with search warrants early Tuesday morning.

Percy and his nephew Steven Kent Kalt, 30, 7173 S. 2985 East, Salt Lake City, were arrested Monday and booked into Salt Lake County jail for investigation of extortion.

Percy was taken to the jail in Bountiful on Tuesday for investigation of aggravated arson, said Wade Waymunt, a detective with the Salt Lake City Police.

A suspect was arrested after a briefcase containing nearly $1,000 was delivered to him as had been outlined in a phone call received by stock promoter Mike Strand, said Waymunt.

"Due to surveillance of the exchange scene, another suspect was observed and arrested," he said.

The arrests followed more than three months of anonymous demands and threats against Strand and his family.

Strand received phone calls from reputed mobsters in Chicago, a plastic fish wrapped in paper sent from Las Vegas a la "The Godfather," and numerous letters demanding $35,000, according to police reports.

One letter purported to be from the "Casa Nostra," a misspelling of the crime organization "Cosa Nostra."

Last month a Molotov cocktail, a gasoline-filled container with a wick, was thrown through the basement window of Strand's Bountiful home. No one was injured.

According to Strand, Percy lost $25,000 buying stock in Global Gold & Mining Co.

Strand acknowledged promoting the company's stock for Global, but said he was not involved in the management of the company.

Competitors race for funds

Jones gives details on fusion

By GERTRUD STIEFLER
Senior Reporter

British scientist Martin Fleischman and BYU physicist Steve Jones brought more details of their cold fusion research before an international conference of scientists in Sicily Wednesday, but many scientists reportedly remained skeptical.

Several of the 100 scientists, gathered from around the world at the Ettore Majorana Center for Scientific Culture, contended that even if fusion had been achieved, there was still no guarantee that it would readily provide a new energy source, according to the Associated Press.

Jones, who has chosen to maintain a low profile since news of the room-temperature cold fusion findings broke three weeks ago, was quoted by AP as saying, "I'm warning people — don't sell your oil yet."

Stateside, meanwhile, the race for cold fusion research funding continued. Art Kingdom, spokesman for Wayne Owens, Utah-D, said Owens' proposal to establish a National Fusion Research Center at the University of Utah, announced last week, would be funded through an endowment fund to pay for equipment and salaries of scientists contributing to cold fusion research.

Part of the purpose for the fund and the invitations for a special visit to the U of U laboratory sent out by Owens was for Utah legislators to focus the attention on Utah as the center of fusion research, said Kingdom.

Although Fleischman and U of U chemist Stanley Pons had applied for a patent on their findings, "the interest in their research leaves room for a great deal of competition," he said.

Kingdom said the legislation would not be drawn up until other Utah congressmen supported it and there had been an input by the scientists.

Rep. Robert S. Walker, R-Pa., also made an appropriations request last week, calling for an amendment to the Department of Energy Authorization legislation to allocate $5 million for cold fusion research. The money would be available for fusion research laboratories throughout the country and would therefore not be directly tied to the University of Utah.

James Brophy, vice president of Research at the U of U, said there has been a "deluge" of "how much do you want?" offers from corporate operations since the cold fusion research at the university became known. The first $100,000 spent on Fleischman's and Pons' experiments came out of the scientists' own pockets, he said.

"So far no private funds have been accepted, but we are putting together a comprised science and engineering fusion program which would draw from both private and federal sources," said Brophy, who said the implementation of the program was only a matter of weeks.

If granted, requests to the Department of Energy and the Office of Naval Research would add a combined $700,000 to the fusion research fund already next month. The $5 million appropriated in a special legislative session last week might make up part of the funds for the center, he said.

There are currently no plans of expanding BYU's cold nuclear fusion research, which has been funded adequately for years by the DOE, said BYU spokesman Paul Richards.

"This current fever for funding is understandable, but we don't see the product (cold fusion energy) as coming tomorrow," said Richards, who said BYU would continue to take a conventional scientific approach to its fusion research.

Richards said BYU had received some good support from prominent financiers and industrialists, but decisions on whether to accept those offers would be postponed until the scientific world had had time to review the results of the experiments.

University Ave. receives a facelift

Resurfacing to be done by October

By JELENE YOUNG
Universe Staff Writer

Construction along University Avenue that is scheduled to last until September or October began Wednesday, according to a Utah Department of Transportation public information official.

Kevin Beckstrom said the resurfacing along University Avenue began with a "kick-off ceremony" between 400 and 500 South at 9 a.m. Wednesday.

Beckstrom said the construction project will go down about 30 inches to completely remove the old surface of University Avenue between 300 South and 800 North and replace it with a concrete surface. While the surface is removed, UDOT will synchronize traffic signals along University Avenue and Provo City will replace old water lines under the road.

He said the project will begin at the south end of the Avenue and move block-by-block, keeping four blocks of University Avenue under construction at a time. However, Beckstrom said, construction will not exceed 30 days on one block.

Steve Colledged, project inspector for UDOT, said, "Hopefully by the

The Minimum Wage Restoration Act, sponsored by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., that would increase the minimum wage to $4.55 per hour with a 60-day "training wage," was passed by the Senate Tuesday.

The minimum wage increase bill sponsored by Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and proposed by Bush, which would have raised the wage to $4.25 per hour with a six-month training wage, was defeated.

The approved bill includes an amendment that would allow for an accumulative training period within the 60-day time frame, said National Labor Committee spokeswoman Robin Buckley.

The 60-day training wage would require employers to pay 80 percent of the minimum wage for 60 days, said Buckley.

"Under the amendment, a person could work at McDonald's for 30 days, quit, and work for Burger King for 30 days, and then quit again and go to Wendy's and lawfully be due the full minimum wage," said Buckley.

Hatch, an opponent of the Democrats' bill, said, "Entry-level jobs are lost when the minimum wage is increased and the unskilled, inexperienced and frequently disadvantaged workers rarely benefit, if not actually hurt, by increases in the minimum wage."

Hatch also feels employers may cut entry levels jobs because of increased costs due to minimum wage hikes.

Kennedy said, "Opponents predict job losses, but I point to the six times the economists have predicted higher unemployment if the minimum was increased and six times the nation has prospered ..."

Kennedy said his bill will pass even if it means a vote overriding a veto by Bush.

Smith, however, predicts the president will veto the bill next week.

"He (Kennedy) thinks that he has the necessary votes to override a veto, but he doesn't, and there will have to be amendments made in the wage and the training amendment to bring the two sides to a compromise," said Smith.

Construction along University Avenue will move north, with four blocks under construction at a time. Each block should be completed within 30 days from the starting date.

time we start the fifth block, we will be finishing the first."

The construction crew will work 12-hour weekdays, and Saturday's also, said Colledged. Though Geneva

Rock's contract stipulates they work a total of 95 days, Saturdays will not count against the contract.

According to Beckstrom, Freedom Boulevard will be used as a detour around the University Avenue reconstruction. There will also be access to businesses in the construction area through back entrances and sidewalks.

Bush urges PAC campaign fund ban

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush urged a ban on campaign contributions by political action committees and said he opposed federal financing of congressional races as he unveiled proposals to tighten ethical rules for Congress, judges and the executive branch.

"We've got to work together to reform a public code of conduct that, at times, appears to be in disarray," Bush said Wednesday.

Bush announced his program in a speech to the annual convention of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

Bush called for a halt to campaign contributions from political action committees, which pumped nearly $156 million directly into congressional races last year.

"We have allowed our parties to become weakened and overshadowed by special interests, and we can best restore the role of the parties by limiting political action committees," Bush said.

If adopted, the net result of Bush's recommendations would be for congressional races to be financed by private contributions, already limited by law to $1,000 per candidate per election. Bush also urged Congress to eliminate a provision of law allowing legislators to convert excess campaign funds to personal use.

Athletics need improving

NCAA director asks others to join Y

By KEVIN J. NIENDORF
Sports Editor

During the annual Cougar Club banquet Wednesday night in the ELWC ballroom, the executive director of NCAA athletics said the integrity and ethics of athletes and coaches has deteriorated in intercollegiate sports events.

Richard D. Schultz asked for other universities to join forces with BYU to improve the level of athletics in the NCAA.

Schultz said restoring integrity and ethics is a difficult challenge but worth all universities.

Along with Schultz, BYU President Jeffrey R. Holland made a statement calling for higher expectations, improved conduct for players, coaches, administrators and fans on a national level.

Clearly university officials, coaches and athletes must set this standard for sportsmanship and fans must be told what is, and what is not, acceptable behavior," said President Schultz.

Student athletes at BYU who do not abide by our high standards of sportsmanship will be disciplined in a manner which can lead to being barred from a game, barred from intercollegiate athletics altogether or barred from the university itself," he said.

President Holland said, similarly, we are subject to the same standards.

Schultz emphasized that the negative aspects of NCAA sports is the result of a handful of players and coaches who make a bad name for the rest of the athletes and coaches.

"It's a pathetic situation when 25-30 athletes spoil it for thousands of other athletes," said Schultz, citing some 20 universities out of approximately 800 that are currently on probation.

"Our goal is to turn coaches and players into positive role models and restore integrity and ethics," Schultz said.

Schultz recounted the story of Len Bias, a promising basketball player who died of a drug overdose less than 24 hours after being selected as the first player chosen in the NBA draft.

However, he commended the athletes and coaches at BYU for their accomplishments and high standards of athletics.

President Holland said, "In the name of preserving and, where necessary, restoring all that is good in collegiate athletics, we want to join hands with others of like mind in fighting to regain this high ground."

But, he said, BYU does not want to join with those who do not wish to retain "these earlier athletic virtues and actively guard against the ills that are threatening to destroy them."

"Each institution should make the kind of effort President Holland has done," said Schultz. "If everyone would do that, the situation of the NCAA could change overnight." Turning to President Holland, he added, "I hope others will join you in your goal."

Holland letter, 2 others claimed fakes

A letter purportedly written by President Jeffrey R. Holland was one of three letters described as "malicious" forgeries aimed at embarrassing The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and its leaders, a Church spokesman said Wednesday.

The letters have been distributed in recent weeks throughout Utah and possibly out of state, said Richard P. Lindsay, LDS Church spokesman.

The letter with President Holland's name on it was sent to The Daily Universe about three weeks ago.

Lane Williams, Universe editor said, "When we received the letter, we quickly noticed that it was not President Holland's signature nor his typical memorandum format. "We sent a copy of the five-page letter to the administration and forgot about it until we received a call from the Church Office Building Tuesday. In point of fact, we didn't even read the entire letter. I just thought it was a disgruntled student."

Another letter, purportedly written by Richard T. Bretzing, managing director of the Church's security department, to Gov. Norm Bangerter contained racial slurs directed at minorities living in Utah. The third appeared to be from a pornographic video store to Bretzing, Lindsay said.

"These three letters are obviously the work of enemies of the Church who are attempting to discredit the institution and its leaders," Lindsay said in a news release.

Grocery store owner appears in court

PROVO — Deon Dove has made a first appearance in 4th Circuit Court on 56 charges stemming from his bankrupt grocery store chain, which the state claims owes more than $5 million in sales taxes.

Dove, who operated 10 Dove's Happy Service Markets in Utah, surrendered to the Utah County Attorney's office Wednesday in keeping with an arrangement he made earlier, said Craig Madsen, chief of the criminal justice division.

Dove appeared before Judge John C. Backlund, who appointed a public defender and released him on his own recognizance with orders to discuss the indictment with counsel and return on April 24 for a continuation of the hearing.

Madsen said the judge appointed counsel for Dove, now of Logandale, Nev., after he said he was without means to obtain his own attorney.

Dove was charged this week with 55 felony counts and one misdemeanor count.

Clash damages reform, says Gorbachev

MOSCOW — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev appealed Wednesday for calm in Soviet Georgia, but rejected the demands of local nationalists and blamed them for igniting lethal strife he said has damaged his drive for reform.

Gorbachev said the Sunday clash between pro-independence activists and security forces which killed 19 people has "damaged the interests of perestroika, democratization and renewal in the country."

Demonstrations in Georgia began April 4 when protesters demanded Georgia secede from the Soviet Union because of alleged interference from the central government.

In his first direct public remark on the unrest, Gorbachev blamed "actions by irresponsible persons" for the loss of life, apparently absolving soldiers and police from any official blame.

In the city of 1.2 million, 900 miles south of Moscow, strikes continue and the first funerals for victims will be today. The Georgian Communist Party chief tendered his resignation, a Soviet spokesman said.

Tuesday was declared an official day of mourning for Georgia's dead.

Police seek leader, bodies in cult killing

MATAMOROS, Mexico — Members of a voodoo cult of drug smugglers, arrested for at least 12 ritual slayings including that of a U.S. college student, said they sacrificed their victims to gain demonic protection from police.

Police dug for two more bodies Wednesday at the ranch where they found the 12 mutilated bodies and were seeking a Cuban they believe led the cult.

"We killed them for protection," Elio Hernandez Rivera, 22, of Matamoros, told reporters Wednesday. He said at a news conference that he shot and killed one victim and decapitated another.

"Very clearly they believed the human sacrifices and the animal sacrifices put a magical shield around them that protected them from evil or harm, even up to bullets," said Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox.

In addition to the University of Texas pre-medical student, the victims included a Matamoros policeman, a Mexican federal police volunteer and a 16-year-old, Mexican and U.S. officials said. As many as three of the dead may be American, officials said.

Rough weather breaks up Alaskan spill

VALDEZ, Alaska — Aerial surveys showed "significantly less oil visible on the water" after two days of high winds and rough seas broke up much of the Exxon Valdez oil spill, the Coast Guard said Wednesday.

Off the coast outside Prince William Sound, where the tanker ran aground on Bligh Reef and lost more than 10 million gallons, observation flights found little more than patches of light sheen and spots of thick crude mousse, said Coast Guard spokesman Brad Smith.

But state officials disputed that account.

An overflight they conducted Tuesday in poor visibility spotted a medium sheen of oil around Chugach Islands and Barren Islands on the edge of the Cook Inlet, which leads to Homer, Kodiak Island and Anchorage. "If it keeps moving in the general direction it's going to get there," said Dan Lawn, a Department of Environmental Conservation official in charge of tracking the oil. He said only small amounts of sheen and frothy mousse were observed in various areas of the southern part of the sound, but some islands and bays remained heavily oiled.

'60s radical leader Abbie Hoffman dies

Associated Press

NEW HOPE, Pa. — Abbie Hoffman, a Chicago Seven radical who founded the Yippie movement of the 1960s, was found dead in his home Wednesday night, authorities said.

Hoffman, 52, who once tossed dollar bills onto the floor of the American Stock Exchange to disrupt business, was found around 8:15 p.m., fully dressed under the covers of his bed, said Solebury Township Police Chief Richard Mangan. There was no apparent cause of death.

Bruce Woolley (left) and Dr. Lee H. Radbaugh participated in a panel discussion about the world in the future.

The world in the year 2000: More global interdependence

JAMES V. RODGERSON
 Universe Staff Writer

A view of the world in the year 2000 was the topic of Wednesday evening's panel discussion held in the stage Halls central building. According to Lee Radbaugh, director of business administration and assistant dean of the Marriott School of Management, the world in the year 2000 will be far more global than it is now. "We will become more interdependent in the years to come," Radbaugh said. Radbaugh admonished students to become as global as they can by learning another language, expanding horizons and if possible participating in a study abroad program. "Students must learn how to learn," Radbaugh said. "They must also learn to broaden their education and become good problem solvers. The work force in the year 2000 will change dramatically," Radbaugh said. "Only 15 percent of the work force will be white males; the remaining 85 percent will be comprised of men and minorities." Because of the change in the work force, people must learn how to work together and deal with these new challenges, Radbaugh said. "There will be significant changes for our society in the area of medicine," said Bruce Woolley, doctor of pharmacology and director of BYU health services. "There will be a great surge in the areas of behavioral medicine and stress-related illnesses," Woolley said. Susan Easton-Black, professor of church history and religious studies, said the year 2000 won't be much different than it is today. "There will still be a Father in Heaven and a Jesus Christ and the form of communication will still be prayer ... you can count on that ... but there's always the possibility of the millennium," Black said. "My area really knows no bounds." "Economists are unable to predict the future," said Clayne Pope, professor of economics and American heritage. Pope also feels that the world in the year 2000 will be very much like it is today. "Nature does not move in jumps," Pope said. "There are very few things (that) have changed the world dramatically ... the changes that do make a difference are the ones that are but continual."

10 win the McKay Essay Contest

By SUSAN M. NEIS
 Universe Staff Writer

Ten winners have been announced for the David O. McKay Essay Contest. Sponsored by Obert C. and Grace Tanner, the David O. McKay Essay Contest is designed to encourage BYU students to search for the high personal ideals found in the gospel of Jesus Christ and to apply these principles in their lives, said Stephan Jackson, who is the editor for the published essays. The top ten winners will have their essays published this summer in "The Restored Gospel and Applied Christianity: Students Essays in Honor of President David O. McKay, 1989." The first place winner in this year's contest was David Rodeback. Rodeback, 24, a senior from Moreland, Idaho, with a double major in Russian and political science, said the inspiration for his essay was "partly personal experiences from the past few years and partly an overdose of Russian literature." Rebecca Jarvis, 25, a graduate student in English composition from Phoenix, Ariz., said her essay, "Doubt and Belief," grew from personal experiences and her feelings about school. Brad Wilcox, 29, a graduate student in elementary education from Provo, said his essay, "I am the Light of My World," stemmed from a time when he was jealous of a friend who was touring China with the Young Ambassadors. He said that at the administration building, he ran into a girl from China who was lost and he became her friend.

 Universe Staff Writer

Barbara R. Wheeler, coordinator of social work services at the BYU's Comprehensive Clinic, was recently appointed as the new director of the School of Social Work. "I'm excited about the School of Social Work. I feel very loyal to it," said Wheeler, an associate professor of social work. "I've been with the school since the beginning of the graduate program. I want to see it succeed. I'm excited to be in this position to contribute on an administrative level." Wheeler will direct the undergraduate and graduate programs by organizing student advisement, curriculum development and faculty hiring. She will assume her new position in July. "Barbara is an outstanding educator," said Stan Albrecht, dean of the College of Family, Home and Social Sciences. "She is extremely qualified to assume this position of leadership at the school of social work. I anticipate the program will reach new heights with her at the helm." The emphasis of the BYU social work program is primarily working with individuals, small groups, marriages and families. The function of the School of Social Work is to graduate professional, effective social workers, said Wheeler.

"This made me realize that I don't have to be in China, speaking in general conference or on a mission. I can be a light to those around me. A light to my world," he said.

Cultural fair to build Soviet awareness

By SHANNON STOWELL
 Universe Staff Writer

The Western world is familiar with the steps Mikhail Gorbachev has taken to make the Soviet Union a more open society. Steps are also being taken to make the BYU community more informed about the Soviets. In conjunction with Utah state's Soviet awareness month, the Outreach programs of the David M. Kennedy Center are sponsoring a cultural fair designed to promote Soviet awareness among BYU students. "We hope to expose people to the different sides of the Soviet Union that they haven't had the opportunity to see before," said Amber Weidner, student coordinator of the student Outreach program. The fair is scheduled to begin Thursday and continue through Friday. Weidner said "weather permitting, all events will be held on the lawn between the Fletcher building and the Kennedy Center (just south of the Checkerboard Quad.)" Cultural, historical and political booths will be set up on the lawn, Weidner said. Students interested in further information about the Soviet awareness fair can call the Outreach program coordinator at ext. 3548.

Challenges await new 'Y' president

Brigham Young University will soon receive a new president. Whether it is a popular teacher, a competent teacher, an obscure researcher or someone who does not work at BYU, the challenges for whomever it is will be great.

But the opportunities are exciting. The new president will have the opportunity to carry BYU along the course President Holland has charted.

About one-third of the current membership of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was baptized during the last decade. As the Church grows through the world, so will the visibility of BYU.

With this visibility will come opportunity and challenge.

The opportunity will be to turn the university into an increasingly unique institution where no one need apologize for trying to live clean and trying to carry that feeling throughout the world.

President Holland repeatedly stressed that BYU was not trying to be the "Harvard of the West," but it was trying to be unique. That vision needs to continue.

President Holland continually emphasized that BYU's building days were generally over. The new president, while overseeing an expanded Talmage Building, a new Joseph Smith Building and a new art museum, must focus on improving quality, as President Holland has done.

We hope the university emulates the belief of President Holland that undergraduate education should be paramount.

The new president should make sure that BYU continues to get competent teachers first and foremost, and that its graduates should be as qualified scholastically as any in the country.

The Daily Universe believes the opportunities for a new administration are exciting. We believe that those opportunities will best be pursued by following the vision of our outgoing leader.

UNIVERSE OPINION

Know your rights as a consumer

At one time or another, we have all had the disheartening experience of purchasing a product or a service that did not live up to our expectations. When this happens we can do one of two things: kick ourselves or take action to correct the problem.

The Ombudsman office (Room 437 ELWC) is a place students can seek help with consumer, legal or housing problems. It hears complaints from the student community, miscellaneous community and suggestions for improved customer relations.

When a customer is dissatisfied with a product or service, the first step in solving the problem involves contacting the company that sold the product or rendered the service. You can explain the reasons for your dissatisfaction in person and try to resolve the problem quickly and efficiently.

If you are not satisfied with the response that you receive from the representative, the next step you can take is writing a letter to the president of the company. The letter should be typed in standard business format, briefly stating your complaint and indicating the response you anticipate from the company. Include in your letter copies of documents that support your case or any other relevant information. To find the name of the president, either phone a local branch of the company, or look in the Standard and Poor's Register of Corporations. This can be found at the local library and includes listings of more than 37,000 executive offices.

If you are not satisfied with the company's response, or receive no response at all to your letter, then you can go to a third party for assistance. The following organizations are set up to arbitrate disputes between the consumer and businesses: The Better Business Bureau is a private, non-profit organization supported by the business community to promote ethics and consumer satisfaction in the marketplace. There are several pamphlets in the Ombudsman's office containing more information about this organization and how it can help the consumer. You can contact them statewide by calling 1-800-662-7182 or locally at 377-2611. Another similar organization, Action Lines, serves as a mediator in disputes and uses the media to help resolve conflicts. You can find out more information about Action Lines and their local chapter by calling the Call For Action Center at 212-355-5965.

If all else fails, small claims court is another alternative that can be utilized.

Other types of legal counsel are available from Utah County Legal Services and the Utah chapter for the Bar Association. The Utah County Legal Services offers one half hour of free legal services for those financially unable to pay an attorney. They can be reached at 374-6766. The other option, finding a private lawyer to represent you, can be done through the Utah chapter of the Bar Association. They can be reached at 531-9025.

More information can be found in the Consumer, Did You Know pamphlet. The Ombudsman office has a copy available.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Skirts

Dear Editor:

I am confused about the stand of the Daily Universe regarding the Code of Honor. In the Code of Honor it is clearly stated that "dresses or skirts above the knee ... are immodest and inappropriate" and "are not within the standards." Why is it then ads with girls wearing miniskirts are frequently found in the paper?

Joaquim da Rosa
Macau, Brazil

Press

Dear Editor:

I read with interest and sympathy Eugene England's call for greater academic freedom at BYU in the April 5 issue.

Given England's own experiences as a faithful Mormon intellectual, his response to official arguments against greater openness is especially touching and compelling.

However, England raised one issue that I believe may require some qualification. Having been associated with the Seventh East Press from the beginning to the end, I would not want England's readers to conclude from his essay that the Press was irresponsible.

At regular intervals during the Press's turbulent history, staff members repeatedly approached the university administration for advice, suggestions, counsel, etc., regarding the paper and its contents.

Despite this, never once prior to the notification that the Press would no longer be allowed to distribute on campus did the administration agree to talk with us about the Press. From our point of view, the "dialogue" that England so eloquently advocates, and for which we had hoped, was non-existent.

Hopefully, England will be more successful in his pleas than the Seventh East Press was.

Free Agency

Dear Editor:

Most of us have probably heard the joke about a book called "Free Agency and How to Enforce It," being attributed to Ernest L. Wilkinson. Actually this joke may be more appropriate for the current administration. Let's look at a few examples.

First, the policy of BYU approved housing. It seems the only real requirement here is that men and women's apartments cannot share the same roof. BYU acts as if this policy is the ultimate cure against unwed mothers. What does this tell you about what the administration expects of us?

Second, consider the continuing ecclesiastical endorsement and the honor code. What's the point of a form that attests to the fact that students talk to a Bishop at least once a year? Do they really think such minimal contact will do any good for those who aren't any more active than this? Perhaps it's to help us live the honor code. Frankly, the honor code fits the majority of student's personal lives. The problem doesn't lie in the honor code or even our agreeing to live it; the problem is what the enforcement (i.e. continuing endorsements and standards) of the honor code tells the administration really expects of us. What ever happened to John Smith's observation that he taught the people correct principles and let them govern themselves?

Perhaps there is something inherently irresponsible in college students. All I know is that to the extent to which BYU's administration continues to treat students as irresponsible, they may well do their best to live up to these expectations. Hasn't anybody heard of self-fulfilling prophecies?

Shift of policy needed in Latin America

Today, when the problems of Central America are so complex they seem insurmountable, it seems that everyone has the solution. Some believe we should support communism as an alternative to the right wing, repressive regimes of the past. Others believe the communists should be wiped out at any cost. We have the sad results of this policy with the barbaric "death squads" of El Salvador.

Then President Reagan tried just about everything in the 1980s, despite what Congress may tell you, before settling on Ollie North and the Contras. He proposed talks between the Sandinistas and the Contra revolutionaries in Nicaragua with the Catholic Church as a mediator. The president of the Sandinista-ruled country, Daniel Ortega, rejected this proposal, probably because of its yanqui origin.

Living in Peru was an education of extreme poverty for me. Countless people live in adobe mud houses with dirt or concrete floors. Many have no running water nor electricity. Children are forced to go to school in one building with cracked windows and no playgrounds. During a two month stay in the jungle, I watched a two-year-old baby girl wither away and die from malnutrition.

In the mountain areas the campesinos are slaughtered by the Sendero Luminoso (Shining Path) guerrillas. Many of these peasants could not even tell you the name of their president or any of Peru's official laws.

They live hard lives controlled by the fanatical Shining Path guerrillas or drug barons. Little hope remains for the future.

The situation is similar in Central America and other areas. The reason Castro has an iron grip on Cuba and the Sandinistas were able to once garner respect among the people after distorting their original doctrine is because the forgotten poor now have hope, a chance in life.

While our country ignored the needs of the masses in the 1960s and 1970s and dealt with the dictator Somoza in Nicaragua and the 14 "families" in El Salvador the Marxist rebels cultivated support amongst the forgotten elements of society.

We could tell a farmer in Cuba he is living in the "bonds of communism" and he might reply, "Thirty years ago my family all worked in the cane fields, even my youngest brothers and sisters. We lived in a small shack, never had enough to eat, sometimes nothing, no hope for school. We needed what we all could earn to live; there was no medical care. Half of my mother's children died of malnutrition before the age of five."

"Castro first built us a home of concrete block, gave us adequate pay, enough to eat and free medical and dental care. My children have an education commensurate to their abilities. True, I have no freedom to choose where I work and what vocation or profession my children study is determined by the state. But what did freedom buy us? Only suffering."

The first step in problem-solving is to identify the problem; is the problem in Central America really communism? Or is the problem poverty?

Ignorance and poverty are the purveyors of repression. It was ignorance that enabled ruthless dictators to come to power in Central America and it is poverty and want that causes Castro to control Cuba and the Sandinistas to deny freedom of the press, unions and a fair opportunity for other Nicaraguan political parties. Our country, despite efforts to rectify the situation the last few years, is responsible for many of the current Central American problems. We have spiraled to overthrow two democratically elected governments in Guatemala in the 1950s and Chile in the 1970s.

When liberation movements began to flourish in Central America in the 1950s, the United States turned a deaf ear to their pleas for help, thereby turned the movements toward a Marxist path.

To fight communism, you must attack the source: poverty. It has never been much easier to starve people than it has been in the last years ago. All the time and "money" spent fighting Castro (and CIA plots involving anti-beard order and Mafia hit men) fortified Marxism in other countries (Nicaragua, El Salvador) our country now wants to turn democratic.

An old newsreel of the 1950s has the narrator intoning optimistic words "Democracy comes to Guatemala!" Footage is shown of U.S. officials toasting generals in military garb after overthrowing the president of that country. The regime called "anti-democratic" regime had an ideology similar to that of Walter Mondale or Michael Dukakis.

Because of this "liberation to democracy," idealistic liberal turned hard line communist and governing bodies of Latin America responded by oppressing dissent with a gun rather than a helping hand. The Contra movement, because of mismanagement by both the House and 435 different "Secretaries of State" in Congress, is dead. "Plans" won't work while one country (the United States) has an embargo on another (Nicaragua).

A possible solution would be to let Latin American debts and problems of that region with humanitarian aid designed to improve rural economies. Cut down spending but not our assurance we still follow the Monroe Doctrine and would respond with a "big stick" to Marxist meddling in the region.

It might work. It's got to be better than what we've tried previously. Doug Gilman

Original plays focus of workshop

REBECCA PIXTON
Universe Staff Writer

Each year, three original plays are accepted to the Playwrights/Directors/Actors Workshop, which is sponsored by the BYU theater department, to be reworked and performed by a group of writers, directors and performers, according to the co-director of the workshop.

The purpose of such a program is to motivate and motivate better plays, said Max Golightly. BYU is one of the few universities that sponsor a structured, organized program for developing original plays.

"We try to capture the feeling of a company in the professional world," said.

Robert Nelson, another co-director of the workshop, said the interest of the workshop lies in the process of creating a play rather than the product. He said creating the final presentation between all those involved is a group process — the playwright, actors and directors.

Nelson said each fall, plays are submitted for application to the workshop. Usually, only three are chosen. He looks for a script that captures truth and human experience," he said.

said. Golightly said one thing that is considered when deciding which plays will be accepted into the workshop is whether they have promise — "a new approach to old and new ideas," he said.

After the scripts have been selected, directors and actors are chosen. The entire process is done to simulate a professional theater atmosphere.

Thomas Rogers, BYU professor of Germanic and Slavic languages, wrote one of the plays being presented by the workshop on April 12-14. His play, "Gentle Barbarian," is based on the life of the 19th century author, Ivan Turgenev.

Rogers said the appealing aspect of adapting Turgenev's life into a play was his descriptions of unrequited love and his depiction of life. He said he wanted to show sympathetic disparity between ideals and behavior.

The play explores the relationships in life, specifically among the aristocratic, and the consequences of promiscuity and the double standard often found among such people.

Rogers said the main character ultimately ends with a poignant, tragic fate because of his relationships.

On a smaller scale, the play explores the role of art as a way to escape life or compensate for life, he said.

Rogers has written plays before that have been scrutinized in the workshop, but he said no other play flowed as much as this one did while he was writing it. He wrote the first draft of the play in 48 hours while in a hotel room.

He said the PDA workshop allows for the directors, actors and playwrights to be on a horizontal level with one another. "It is stimulating for the creative process not to be a dictative one," he said.

He said this year was the most fruitful and satisfying experience he has ever had with the workshop.

Rogers said he feels it is really important to try and write out of the emotional pit of feelings. "You have to go with feelings to hold the audience's interest," he said.

At the end of the semester, and the workshop, the plays are presented in a stage reading. Afterward, the audience is petitioned to criticize and comment on each play.

Rogers said he feels it is very enlightening to listen to what the audience has to say.

Wendy Mabee, 23, a senior majoring in theater from Bend, Ore., is directing one of the plays. The play, "Cubits," was written by Rory Scanlan, a theater department faculty member.

Mabee said the play is about how people measure happiness through life. It deals with an older man who comes to live with his daughter and son-in-law.

She said in the direction process she was striving for a play that flowed well, where the audience could identify with the characters. "I wanted something that would immediately grab the audience — one with a moral message," she said.

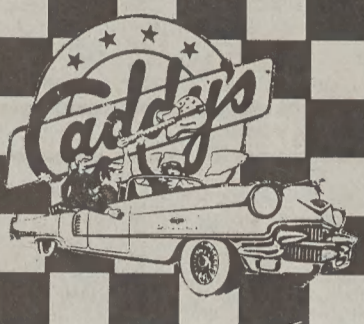

The third play accepted to the workshop is "Es War Einmal." It is written by Carolyn Owen, a Provo resident. Owen said she applied to the PDA workshop because she felt she had developed her script as far as she could without any feedback from outside sources.

She said it is a comedy about a woman who is supposedly working on her dissertation, but instead spends the time reading other books, unbeknownst to her husband.

The three plays will be presented in the Nelke Experimental Theater, HFAC through Friday. "Es War Einmal" runs tonight and "Gentle Barbarian" Friday night.

All the performances will begin at 7:30 and are open to the public.

Philharmonic orchestra to combine with choirs

By MOLLY R. LARSON
Universe Staff Writer

More than 500 singers and musicians will combine to present three concerts at BYU and in Salt Lake City. Four BYU choirs will perform with the Philharmonic Orchestra tonight and Friday night at BYU.

The University Singers, Concert Choir, Men's Chorus and Women's Chorus will repeat the concert with the orchestra in the Salt Lake Tabernacle April 15 at 7:30 p.m.

David Warner, a featured soloist for the concerts, said a production of this magnitude isn't done very often. Warner is a 26-year-old senior from Provo with a double major in music and philosophy.

Warner will be singing the baritone solo part for Maurice Durufle's Requiem, op. 9 for chorus and orchestra. Mezzo-soprano Martha West will be the other featured soloist.

"There is a great deal of joy of expression in being together for a combined expression of musical art," said Clyn Barrus, director of the Philharmonic Orchestra.

"Even more significant, however, is that this type of concert gives us the opportunity to perform certain works that could not be done without very large ensembles," he said.

Warner said the requiem is impressionistic, which means the meaning of the music is communicated by the texture and tones of the music as well as the melody.

Barrus said the requiem is regarded as the composer's greatest work. He said this piece is deeply religious and uses Gregorian chants with origins in the 11th and 12th centuries. He said many of the requiems of Durufle's time were more secular than religious.

Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe for Orchestra and Choir" will also be performed. The work is based on the mythological Greek story of Daphnis and Chloe, two children marooned on an island after their parents were killed.

The piece was written as a ballet for the French national theater.

Ravel added voices to the orchestra music. The voices are not predominant and no words are sung.

The BYU performances will begin at 7:30 p.m. both nights in the de Jong Concert Hall of the HFAC.

Tickets are available through the music ticket office, 378-7444. The Tabernacle performance is free.

Congress reconsiders cable TV regulations

By HISAYOSHI IWAMITSU
Senior Reporter

Congress began to examine Wednesday whether the cable TV industries should be returned to government regulation.

Since the Congress passed the 1984 Cable Act, which in essence removed all regulatory oversight, basic cable service prices have risen sharply. Critics complain cable TV is becoming too expensive for low income people.

According to Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, one of the critics, the basic cable rates have risen 32 percent nationally since deregulation, and consumers are being overcharged billions of dollars by cable monopolies.

Metzenbaum, who chaired the Wednesday hearing of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Monopoly, said, "The price consumers pay for cable service increased higher than any other commodity or service in the entire United States. Consumers are complaining loudly about both rates and service."

The lack of competition in cable TV means there is no mechanism capable of putting downward pressure on cable rates; therefore, Metzenbaum said he proposed a bill which would allow the communities to regulate the cable rates to create some competition.

Nancy Coffey, press secretary to Metzenbaum, said, "Cable is a lifeline to people. They depend on it for information, for education and for contacting outside of the world." Only 32 of more than 8,000 cable systems have any direct competition.

Bill Johnson, deputy of Mass Media Bureau and chief of the Federal Communications Commission, said if the rates are reduced, the quality of service will decrease. "I think, at this point in time, that the public is not happy with the rates" but is well satisfied with the quality of the programming.

However, he said the government should control cable TV rates to avoid monopolies. The government did not regulate cable TV rates in 1984 because cable characterized itself as an infant industry, but it has now grown into a multibillion-dollar industry, he said.

Metzenbaum said, "It is clear that something has got to be done about the industry."

According to John Bennett, press secretary of Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, Metzenbaum has not discussed his proposed bill with Sen. Hatch, so he does not know exactly what the senator's feelings are. However, Bennett said he thinks Hatch will oppose the bill.

Bennett said new developments, such as a technology that will allow telephone companies to deliver cable TV services, might create competition and influence the prices the cable TV industries charge.

Utahns took part in pro-choice rally

Utah's chapter of the National Organization for Women (NOW) discussed the group's participation at the March for Women's Equality in Washington D.C. at a meeting Wednesday, said a member of NOW.

"Lots of people donated money to help us go to represent Utah," said Lucy Malin, a member of NOW in Utah who attend the march.

"Most people think it was just a demonstration for abortion, but it wasn't just about abortion it was about women's rights," said Mary B. Oakley, another member of NOW.

Other issues addressed at the Washington D.C. march for women's rights were the equal rights amendment, child care and safe, legal, accessible, effective forms of contraception, said Oakley.

Soviets cling to old ways, not accustomed to choices

By JELENE YOUNG

Mikhail Gorbachev is more popular in the United States than he is in the Soviet Union, a Soviet immigrant told an audience at Utah Valley Community College Tuesday.

"The Soviet people don't have stability any more. People don't know what will happen," said Matvei

Post offices extend hours for last minute tax filers

Universe Services

The United States Post Office in Provo is offering extended hours for income tax forms to meet the Monday, April 17 mailing deadline.

Provo's East Bay Post Office, 936 So. 250 East, will keep collection boxes open until midnight Monday for tax forms to get an April 17 postmark.

In addition to extended collection box hours, the post office will have postal workers on hand in the lobby to help with mailing procedures.

Acting Postmaster J. Phillip Morgan said that 19 other post offices in Utah will extend their hours Monday to help tax filers.

The main Provo Post Office, 95 West 100 South, will close Monday at 7 p.m.

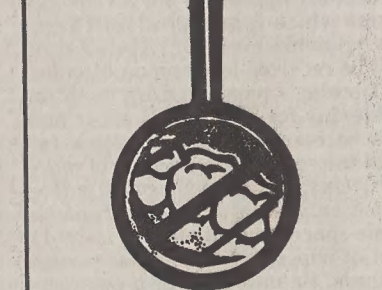

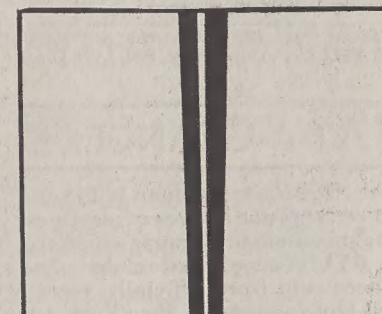

The Postmaster offered the following tips for mailing taxes:

- Make sure the tax return has the correct postage. The IRS and the State Tax Commission will not pay postage due costs.

- Make sure the envelope is securely sealed.

- Make sure to include the return address on the outside of the envelope.

tion groups) pro-life because we are pro-life. We are pro-family. We are pro-choice," said Oakley.
